ABSTRACT

Based on data collected by the American Association of Junior Colleges (AAJC), this directory provides information on 683 junior colleges in the United States and its territories, Canada, and other selected countries for 1958-59. Following introductory material on the scope of the directory, part I lists the colleges alphabetically by state or country, providing the following information for each: location; administrative head; AAJC membership; state recognition or accrediting agency; type of control or affiliation; co-educational or single-sex status; date founded; enrollments for fall 1958 broken down by freshman, sophomore, or unclassified status, adult enrollments, and full- or part-time status; summer and cumulative enrollments; and numbers of full- and part-time faculty. This section also provides statewide summaries for all junior colleges and for public and private institutions, which include data on number of colleges, AAJC membership, student enrollments for fall 1958, and full- and part-time faculty. Part II presents an analysis of junior college growth from 1900 to 1959, highlighting expansion in three states; presents data on changes in the number of colleges and enrollments, types of colleges, and accrediting agencies; and explains changes in the 1960 directory. This section also includes a list of individual AAJC members; an alphabetical listing of junior colleges; a directory of national and regional junior college organizations; and a directory of junior college honorary societies and social organizations. Part I

The Directory contains information about junior colleges in the United States, its territories, Canada, and a few other nations. The list comprises both accredited and non-accredited institutions. In general, institutions not designated as junior colleges by state departments of education have not been included. Every reasonable effort has been made to secure complete information about each college. Heavy reliance has been placed on the accuracy of the reporting colleges.

Separately organized junior colleges on campuses of senior colleges, general colleges, or lower divisions of four-year colleges and universities have been included only if they are active members of the American Association of Junior Colleges. Undergraduate centers and extension centers, as in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, are included in the Directory in view of the fact that they are essentially two-year colleges and have provided the necessary information.

More extensive and detailed information about junior colleges may be secured in American Junior Colleges, Fifth Edition, edited by Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., and published by the American Council on Education, 1785 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington 6, D.C., 1960.

Definition of Terms

Please Note:
Several modifications have been instituted in this Directory.
The names of designated administrative heads are listed along with the names of the institutions in the "Alphabetical List of Junior Colleges" in Part II, rather than in the data tables. Junior college programs are all of two years' duration except where marked with appropriate footnotes.
In the interest of presenting an accurate national synoptic picture of student enrollments, data have been assembled as of October 15, 1958. Cumulative 1958–59 figures are also provided for comparability with data of previous years. See paragraph entitled "Enrollment" for "full-time" and "part-time" student definitions used for the first time in this Directory.

AAJC Membership. Membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges is indicated by an "M" or a "P" depending upon whether the membership is full or provisional. Active membership is open to any college which has received complete accreditation or equivalent recognition of any of the types indicated under "accreditation" below. Provisional membership is open to newly organized institutions and to others which have not yet received such recognition.

Accreditation. The American Association of Junior Colleges does not act as an accrediting agency. Member institutions are prohibited by constitutional provisions from indicating, implying, or publicizing accreditation by this Association. Types of accreditation or equivalent recognition or approval are indicated by symbols as follows:

Regional Accrediting Associations

E—New England Association
M—Middle States Association
N—North Central Association

S—Southern Association
W—Western College Association
W—Northwest Association
X—Affiliation with the Catholic University of America if not affiliated with one of the regional accrediting associations.
Y—Affiliation with the University Senate of the Methodist Church if not affiliated with one of the regional accrediting associations.
I—Engineers' Council for Professional Development.

State Departments of Education or Equivalent

State Department of Education; the Board of Education in the District of Columbia; the Junior College Accrediting Commission in Mississippi; the Massachusetts Board of Collegiate Authority; the Michigan Commission on College Accreditation; Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education; the Provincial Department of Education in Canada.

Type. Three main types are distinguished: Coeducational, for men only, and for women only indicated by C., M. and W., respectively.

Control. The primary basis for classification is twofold: institutions publicly controlled and institutions privately controlled. The first group is divided into state, local or municipal, union district, county, and joint county junior colleges; the second into those under denominational control or affiliation, nondenominational and nonprofit institutions, and proprietary institutions. The following abbreviations are used:
A. M. E.—African Methodist Episcopal
A. M. E. Z.—African Methodist Episcopal Zion
A. of God—Assembly of God
Br. in Chr.—Brethren in Christ
Ch. of Chr.—Church of Christ
Ch. N. J.—Church of New Jerusalem

Year Organized. Each institution was asked to report the year it was organized as a junior college. In some cases the date of origin of an institution which later developed into a junior college may have been given.

Enrollment. Enrollment data are given for the year June 1, 1958 to May 31, 1959 unless otherwise stated.

Full-time student: student enrolled in 12 or more semester hours.

Freshman: student who has completed less than 28 semester hours of college credit at time of registration.

Sophomore: student who has completed 28 or more semester hours of college credit at time of registration.

Part-time student: student enrolled in at least one course for credit and less than 12 units.

Special student: student not included in above categories. A special student is classified as an "adult student" if this category exists. If adult category does not apply, a special student is listed under "other."

Summer session enrollment, 1958: total of students enrolled with no student counted more than once.

Total cumulative enrollment: enrollment of both semesters and the 1958 summer session. Includes any person who enrolled during the college year with no person counted more than once.

Faculty. The number of faculty is given for the same year as the student enrollment. The full-time faculty equivalent total is the sum of the full-time faculty and the full-time equivalent of the part-time faculty.

Administrative Head. Listed in Part II in "Alphabetical List of Junior Colleges." Each institution's designation of its administrative head has been accepted. The official title has been indicated following the name. It is assumed that this person is the one to whom correspondence should be addressed. It is not implied that in all cases the designated administrative head holds final administrative responsibility for the college.

Part II

Analysis of Junior College Growth

EDMUND J. GLEAZER, JR.

THERE HAS been some tendency in this country to look upon increasing enrollments in colleges and universities as a kind of national calamity, second only to the not dissimilar problem of what to do with all of our wheat and corn and butter and eggs. Our reason tells us that we do have a problem here; however, as we examine our basic beliefs—what we hold to be true—those basic convictions which support and sustain the society of free men in which we live, thoughtful people are grateful that there are so many young people and adults who are inclined to yield themselves in growing thousands to the discipline and insights of higher education.

The time has come when the citizens of America must have more than an academic interest in extending opportunities for higher education. The kind of society we consider of value requires a constantly rising level of education. This fact has been amply demonstrated in the fields of science and technology. It is equally true in man's social relations but unfortunately there is a greater lag here in our comprehension of need. A member of the President's Cabinet recently stated that the most serious problem we face in this country over the next 25 years is the need for trained manpower. He affirmed that we need urgently to develop all of our human resources and that education has this basic responsibility. In a similar vein, former Harvard President James Bryant Conant is quoted in Time magazine as saying, "A modern industrial nation needs more than a few brains; it has to uplift talent at every level. It cannot afford technological unemployables—spiritually, politically, or economically."

There is no questioning the fact that the perpetuation of our society requires people of learning, but sometimes we forget a corollary imperative: There is also the American dream of self fulfillment—the liberation of the human mind because that in and of itself is good and ought to happen. As this ideal agitates within the context of the social and economic facts of our generation and the one to come, the result will surely be dramatic developments in the field of education. And no picture of American education today is complete without inclusion of the junior college.

GROWTH CONTINUES

Growth in the numbers of junior colleges and in students enrolled continues to be dramatic. There is a real likelihood that in making projections of student enrollments over the next ten years educators have been too conservative and have not given sufficient attention to two extremely important factors, the motivating influence of proximity of an institution of higher education; and the effect of a variety of college programs to match a variety of student interests and aptitudes. An example of the importance of proximity is the case of Chipola Junior College in Jackson County, Florida. At the time the junior college was established in 1947 only seven per cent of the high school graduates in that county enrolled in college. In 1959, twelve years later, 52 per cent of the high school graduates began college careers. About seven per cent attended institutions outside of the county. The rest enrolled at Chipola Junior College. It is quite clear that a high percentage would not have begun college work at all if it had not been for the existence of the junior college. This story is being repeated throughout the country where similar opportunities are available.

The impact of appropriate courses being available has been demonstrated recently at Bakersfield College, California. In September, 1957, 23 students were admitted to the new two-year program in nursing at that institution. Twenty-one of the students were graduated from the college with the Associate in Arts degree in June, 1959. The graduates took state board examinations for licensure as registered nurses in California during the summer. The entire class passed. Seventeen of these registered nurses are currently employed in the Bakersfield area. As a group, the class consisted of 20 women and one man. The age range was 17-plus years to 46. At the time of admission 10 students were single and 11 were married. Four students married during the course of the program. Married students had from one to four children in their families; one student had three grandchildren. Undoubtedly many of the persons included in the class would not have entered the nursing field if the associate degree program had not been available in the local community.

Junior colleges established in increasing numbers and placed within commuting distance of the majority of residents in many of the states will be responsible for greatly increasing the number of people who will experience some kind of post-secondary instruction. Moreover, there will be more students who, having taken two years of post-secondary work, will be inclined and able to continue their education in the upper division of four-year colleges and universities.

THREE STATES ILLUSTRATE EXPANSION

In many states junior colleges are well recognized and their development is orderly and according to plan. Among these states are Florida, New York, and California. Last year, in those 26 counties of Florida in which the services of public junior colleges were available, 75 per cent of the students enrolling in college for the first time chose the junior college. Florida has authorized four additional areas for junior colleges.

In New York State the first locally sponsored community junior college was established in 1950. There were 257 full-time students. Nine years later there were 13,000 full-time students. During this same period a total of $58,000,000 of construction had been completed or was under contract. Operating budgets for next year will probably be around $12,000,000. There are now 16 junior colleges under the State University of New York and 25 privately supported institutions. The figures given for construction and operation apply only to the institutions under the State University.

In the college year 1958–59, California public junior colleges enrolled 73.3 per cent of all full-time students enrolled in public higher education below the junior year. In 1958–59 there were 95,849 full-time students in the junior colleges of California. By 1970, it is estimated that there will be 220,000.

MODIFICATIONS IN "DIRECTORY"

This year's Directory utilizes the new definitions for student categories that are being employed in the compilation of data for American Junior Colleges, Fifth Edition, edited by Edmund J. Gleazer, Jr., published by the American Council on Education, Spring, 1960. These are listed at the beginning of this Directory. While a changeover from one set of definitions to another limits the comparability of data from year to year, the use of standardized definitions will enhance the reliability and consistency of data gathered across the nation.

The Directory also reports for the first time a synoptic picture of junior college enrollments and classifies freshman and sophomore students according to full-time or part-time categories. "Total" enrollment figures given are indicative of the number of students in the junior colleges of the country as of approximately October 15, 1958. Cumulative figures are also given so that enrollment comparisons can be made with previous years as in Table IV. The "cumulative" figures include all students enrolled for the entire 1958–59 school year, including the 1958 summer session, as well as special and adult students enrolled for short courses or informal education. However, instructions were given to reporting institutions to count each student only once. The "cumulative" total therefore gives some indication of the number of different people served by the college during the entire year.

EXPLANATION OF TABLES

Table IV gives a picture of the growth in the number of institutions as well as in the total enrollment from 1900 to 1958–59. The figure given for the total number of institutions is 677. This does not include seven foreign colleges listed formerly. The actual increase, therefore, is 17 and not 10 as indicated by the table data. The rate of increase in cumulative enrollment dipped from approximately 11 per cent for the years 1953 to 1957 and then to 2.56 in 1957–58 and to 1.39 in 1958–59. Part of this decrease in the rate of growth is accounted for by the fact that seven foreign colleges with a combined enrollment of about 3,300 have not been included in the tallies, and part is explained by the drop in adult enrollments evidenced in the last two years of this record. An additional and newly emerging factor accounting for the decline in the growth rate is that a number of junior colleges, both public and private, have chosen to or have been forced to limit registrations because of full-capacity enrollments.

Table V shows the growth in the number of institutions, those under the control of public authority, those that are independent or church-related and the percentage of change between the two main types. Listed among the 677 junior colleges are all institutions accredited by state departments of education or by regional accrediting associations as definitely organized two-year colleges, extension centers of universities, or teachers colleges. Until 1947–48 there were more junior colleges under private auspices than those publicly supported. However, from that time to the present the increase in the number of public institutions has been fairly consistent while the number of church-related and independent junior colleges has remained relatively steady.

Table VI shows comparative growth in enrollments of public and private junior colleges. The number of students in the public institutions has exceeded enrollments in the privately controlled colleges since 1921–22, and the difference increased steadily in favor of the public colleges until 1951–52. Since that time the proportion enrolled in the two types of junior colleges has held fairly constant. A factor to be considered in interpreting the significance of these data is the predominant residential character of the private institutions as compared with the commuting student body of the majority of public institutions. The public junior colleges have many more part-time and adult students enrolled than do the private junior colleges.

Based on a comparison of freshman and sophomore enrollments only, the percentage of students enrolled in private institutions as of October 15, 1958, was 16.4 per cent.

Table VII shows freshman and sophomore enrollments as compared with "others." Under the latter caption are included special and adult students plus second semester and summer session registrants. The 1958–59 figure under "others" includes a number of students who would have been listed formerly as freshmen or sophomores. This fact accounts for much of the decrease in enrollments which shows up on this table. Revised definitions for student categories are listed at the beginning of the Directory. Both "total" enrollments as of October 15, 1958, and the year 'round cumulative figures have been given for 1958–59.

Directory to help the reader obtain some picture of the past development in enrollment of adult and special students as previously defined. However, because the change-over to a new set of definitions of these student categories limits comparability with other years' data, no percentage change has been entered in the 1958–59 listing. Plans are being made to continue recording percentage gain or loss of newly defined student categories in succeeding directories. One problem in tabulating adult enrollments arises from changes in the regulations in some states in regard to conditions for receiving state assistance for enrolled students. In California, those districts in which junior colleges are located may qualify for state assistance for out-of-district adult students if they are enrolled in graded classes, that is, in courses in the 13th and 14th years. It is apparent that methods of counting students may very well affect the number of adult and special students reported. Also it is likely that the number of adult students will be related to changing economic conditions. The reader will be able to observe a much greater fluctuation in adult and special student enrollments than in freshman and sophomore enrollment.

The distribution of enrollments with respect to size of the public and private junior colleges can be observed in Table IX. As can be readily noted, the public institutions are typically much larger than privately sponsored ones. Some of the small private institutions are operated by religious orders and might be described as single purpose junior colleges, e.g., preparation for teaching in church schools or other church responsibilities. Generally speaking, the public junior colleges will have a larger proportion of adult and part-time students enrolled.

Many junior colleges have reached a point where they can no longer be described as small institutions. While there is no general agreement about the optimum size of a junior college, a question can be raised about the use of terms which characterize junior colleges as small institutions by definition. One California county study suggests the setting of a limit of 5,500 students, while plans written in other states advise a lower figure.

JUNIOR COLLEGE FACULTIES

Tables I, II, and III in Part I show college faculties, both part time and full time. A comparison with 1957–58 shows that in 1958–59 there was an increase of about 2,100 in the number of full-time faculty equivalents bringing the total to over 24,000. Full-time faculty rose by more than 3,400 to the 20,000 mark, while part-time faculty decreased by 2,700 to approximately 13,400.

In public junior colleges, part-time faculty decreased by about 18 per cent and full-time faculty rose by about 20 per cent. In private colleges part-time faculty decreased by about 12 per cent and full-time faculty rose by about 21 per cent. Full-time equivalents for all junior colleges rose by 10 per cent.

A significant trend apparent in these figures is the shifting of part-time faculty into full-time roles in both public and private institutions. In the latter instance the percentage increase of full-time faculty was almost double the percentage decrease of part-time faculty, whereas in public junior colleges the percentages were just about equal. During the past two years, the full-time faculty increased by more than 4,200, while part-time faculty registered a drop of 1,540.

TYPES OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

Public or tax supported junior colleges now number 400, while the privately con-control among the non-tax supported jun-277. Table X shows the distribution of trolled or church-related institutions total ior colleges.

The co-educational junior college is the prevailing type with a total of 552 institutions. There are 75 junior colleges for women and 50 for men. In terms of number of years into which the colleges are organized, the two-year institution is by far the leading type. In view of this fact, the category listing the number of years for each institution's program has been omitted from the state-by-state listings in the Directory. Special footnotes have been added to indicate those institutions with more or less than two-year programs. Six hundred and thirty-five are two-year colleges; 21 list themselves as part of four-year programs; six offer education in grades 11 through 14; seven are under the three-year plan and one offers a one-year program. Five colleges are in transition from two-year to four-year institutions.

Generally, in co-educational public junior colleges, men outnumber women by more than two to one.

REGIONAL ACCREDITATION OF JUNIOR COLLEGES

Table XI was first used in the 1958 Directory because of growing interest among junior colleges in regional accreditation. There is great variation among the regions and the states in the proportion of junior colleges regionally accredited. A little more than half of the nation's junior colleges now are regionally accredited. In view of the importance of regional accreditation in the public mind, those areas in which few junior colleges are accredited may well wish to consider appropriate steps for meeting this problem. Data for Table XI is presented as of October 15, 1958.

ASSOCIATION MEMBERSHIP

Institutional membership in the American Association of Junior Colleges as of the end of summer, 1959, reached a new high of 506. This is an increase of ten members over the preceding year. In a large number of states membership is either 100 per cent or close to that figure. In several states, individual institutions attached to or affiliated with universities are not allowed to apply for membership in the Association because of university regulations governing such activities. Some university departments have taken out organizational sustaining memberships and in several instances, the chief administrators of the junior colleges have become individual members.
